Your Mammogram Results: Prior Images Needed

What your results mean and next steps

Thank you for choosing UW Medicine and Seattle Cancer Care Alliance for your breast imaging.

Your Results

In order to interpret your recent mammogram results more accurately, we need to see the films from other mammogram(s) you have had at other places.

This request does not mean that you have cancer. Most times, when we compare the images we took to other images, it shows that there have not been any changes. If this happens, it tells us that your results are normal.

When we receive the older films, we will compare them to your current films. We will then write a final report. We will mail the results to you, and send the report to your healthcare provider.

If we do not receive your old films within 30 days, we will send you a letter asking you to return for more imaging.

No matter what final results we find, get another screening mammogram done right away if:

- You or your provider feels something in your breast(s) at any time.
- You notice a lump in your breast(s) that doesn’t go away or increases in size.
